Thanks to Karen Dillon, Jim Eichelman, Richard Eskin, Karen Messick, Steven Oney, Gordon Risk, and Jim Voeglein for their contributions to this issue.

Your Friendly Neighborhood
Focal Point Editor:
Diane Bovenkamp

This edition of Focal Point contains another exciting lineup. Jim Eichelman muses on The Allure of Black & White photography. Richard Eskin gives information on the Artist In Residence Program at U.S. National Parks (February 14th club presentation), accompanied by his In Their Words advice. Karen Messick writes about how she prepared for solo photography on her recent trip to Ireland (highlights from her November 29th presentation). Gordon Risk is back with another installment of Collector's Corner, teaching us about Twin Lens

Reflexes, and (spoiler alert) sharing a moment with his daughter from a few decades ago that he captured with the same camera. Jim Voeglein gives us his Memories of the 2012 Dolly Sods Club Trip and interesting links for the e-Zone. In Opportunities, Karen Dillon gives tips on local museum exhibits and a primer website for the NYC meeting. Info in the Member News, Opportunities, and Words of Wisdom sections were from Steven Oney's "Weekly Updates."

My editorial image for this issue is called Road To Nowhere (cue Talking Heads song), taken February 21st in blissfully warm Chandler (near Phoenix), AZ. Please send me your submissions for the next newsletter by March 20th:

The Allure of Black & White By Jim Eichelman

Here we are with ever-increasing technology to capture and print more vibrant and saturated colors than ever before. Yet, in a recent digital competition, all six images that placed were monochrome.

Even though we are heading into March and the clocks are about to “spring forward,” our landscape is devoid of color. There is still a bit of time before we experience the vibrant colors of spring. Images we make outdoors at this time of year depend on shapes, texture and differences in tonal ranges to make them come to life.

Monochrome images take us back to the early days of photography. However, today we have to work in a different manner to create monochrome images. One of the hardest aspects is to think in monochrome. This is difficult, since our senses are bombarded with color and so most of our images are shared in color.

We can spend time reviewing work of the masters of monochrome to try and help develop our skills. Experts and members have given presentations on monochrome theory, conversion to monochrome, special monochrome software, and how to use all of these tools to make better monochrome images. Two of the sessions at a conference I recently attended discussed black and white from the Masters, and the black and white digital darkroom. Our own Arthur Ransome made a presentation at Natures Vision in 2011 on the topic (<http://aransomephoto.com/blog/2011/11/22/seeing-in-black-and-white-presentation/>).

So, while we are waiting for the colors to appear, why don't you head out and make some of these timeless images for yourself. You can even go “old school” and break out that old film camera.

Words of Wisdom

“Photography is not about the thing photographed. It is about how that thing looks photographed.”
- Garry Winogrand

“You can't wait for inspiration, you have to go after it with a club” – Jack London

“I don't think there's any artist of any value who doesn't doubt what they're doing.”
- Francis Ford Coppola

“I am always doing that which I cannot do, in order that I may learn how to do it.” - Pablo Picasso

Essential Equipment While On Assignment:

- I consider a tripod to be essential and use a Gitzo GT3530S with a Markins ball head
- You can get by with the equivalent of a 24-70 mm and 70-200 mm with a teleconverter (e.g., 18-200 mm)—I added a 200 mm macro and an 80-400 teleconverter
- Get a good back pack with an attachment for a water bottle—you may need to hike for miles; Although, for the most part, you can work from your car
- Add a polarizer and grad neutral density
- D200 and P7000 backup to D800E
- If you have pro quality equipment, get insurance

RichEskinPhotoblog.blogspot.com

www.RichEskinPhoto.com

- Backup your hard drive
- Cell phone app for sunrise, sunset

The Real Value:

- Ability to shoot everyday in an area rich in nature/wildlife/landscape images
- Opportunity to develop your own style & vision/explore themes to establish a body of work
- A time to discover how your work is distinctive
- Prepare in advance by reviewing other images from the area
- Nightly, explore what you did that day to find a way to do better the next day

In Their Words: Richard Eskin

What was your very first camera?

A Minolta SRT with a 50 mm f1.8 lens that I bought in high school.

What do you consider essential gear to take on a shoot, particularly if you need to travel light?

I consider a tripod essential gear, so I got a fairly light but very sturdy one, a Gitzo 6x carbon fiber (GT3530S). Because I am short, I can get by with a shorter tripod than most folks which also keeps the weight down. I have a Markins ball head on it. My two key lenses are a 28-70 and 70-200. Both are f2.8 lenses, but if I had it to do over again, I would probably get a f4 70-200 to save weight. That said, on my recent trips I also used a 80-400 and 200 macro lens extensively, often, even if I had to hike.

What person, place, or thing inspired you to become a photographer?

Ansel Adams' landscapes.

Which 3 people, living or dead, would you like to have for dinner and conversation?

Ansel Adams, John Paul Caponigro and Jerry Uelsmann.

What is one piece of advice you would like to offer to others on following their bliss in photography?

Think more about creativity, vision and inspiration and less about technical issues and equipment. Visit art galleries, museums and look at a lot of others' work for inspiration. Also, find a way to shoot at least a little every week to test out that inspiration and keep it going.

Ireland By Karen L. Messick

Karen Messick

Planning for a solo trip on the road in Ireland was fun! I had never been to Ireland but I do have Irish roots and when I signed up for a photography tour with John Barclay, Dan Sniffen and Peter Cox, I decided to extend my stay. I added ten more days after the tour to make a tour on my own driving around the Irish Countryside.

Image 1: Dingle, Ireland © Karen Messick

I was asked about how I planned my trip during my club presentation on Ireland and I wanted to share the process I used. First, I researched the areas we would be covering on the organized tour and eliminated those from my own road trip through Ireland. After that, I bought the following tour books from Amazon. Reading through them provided me with good ideas on what I might want to plan:

- Rick Steves Ireland 2012
- Fodor's Ireland 2012
- Frommer's Ireland Day by Day
- Frommer's 25 Great Drives in Ireland

In addition to the travel guides, I bought a large bound Ireland Road Atlas, for times when I may not have a GPS signal or for further navigation, planning needs when on the road in Ireland.

Secondly, I spent some time online looking at sites that were named in the travel books. From the online research and books, I decided that I wanted to visit ancient tombs and abbeys which our country does not have. Also I wanted to AVOID cities! Instead, I planned to visit the west coast, as I love beaches, and small rural towns.

Image 2: Sunset Dingle Peninsula © Karen Messick

At first I thought I would randomly wander and let each day unfold on the road, taking my chances at getting accommodations at the end of the day. However, a few weeks before I left, my rational brain took over and said MAKE A PLAN!!! and the plan evolved...It was also important for me to make a plan to give to family members who might need to find me in case of emergency. It included an itinerary, hotel addresses and phone numbers, and my areas of exploration. I made sure that I e-mailed the itinerary to my daughter to put her mind at ease.

Ireland (continued)

By Karen L. Messick

Image 3 © Karen Messick

My third step in the process was mapping out my plan. I love Apple Products and I used my iPad, along with the atlas, to map out routes, and estimate times and distances for each day of exploration. I gave myself a minimum of two nights in one location to allow for several areas of interest to explore each day in the nearby geographic area of the hotels, castles, and B&B's in which I stayed. I decided since I was PLANNING, I would pick a castle, a small non-commercial hotel, and a Bed & Breakfast for a varied experience.

My planning paid off and, except for the one day I was really rained out, I made it to all the locations I had planned to visit with a little "ramble" time in between. Remember, when all else fails to get you where you want to go ....ask a local!

It was a great trip! Driving reservations were made through EuropeCar and I was happy with the automatic transmission car I had ordered, as well as the GPS navi system I ordered when booking the car. I booked online and read carefully about the models and transmission choices available. I booked all my overnight reservations ahead on line with no issues.

I enjoyed the tour with Irish Landscape Photographer Peter Cox so much that I am offering the same South-west Ireland or "Wild Ireland" tour next year.

The tour dates for 2013 are June 2 – June 11.

Collector's Corner Twin Lens Reflexes by Gordon Risk

In the November/December edition of the Focal Point, I did a write up of the Rolleiflex, the camera that has the reputation as the best of the twin lens reflexes. There were many copies of this camera from Germany to Japan and many other countries, the USA included. My small collection of SLRs are mostly German to one simple Japanese RICOH.

Zeiss was the main competition and their first model was the IKOFLEX produced in 1934 (see Image 1). It had the nickname of the "Coffee Can" because the film traveled horizontally rather than vertical travel like the ROLLEI, giving it a wide body shape. It had the advantage of using both 620 film as well as the 120. The later model is the IKOFLEX IC (see Image 2). Produced from 1956 through 1960, it had a built-in selenium exposure meter, seen above the top viewing lens. The meter needle is visible on the ground glass inside the hood.

The Voigtlander Superb, first built in 1933 (see Image 3), also has horizontal film transport like the Coffee Can. The swiveling top finder lens automatically corrects parallax. The shutter speed numbers are printed in reverse on the outer ring of the shutter and has a small prism to the right of the lower taking lens allows easy visibility from above.

The economy Voigtlander model is the Brilliant, starting in 1932 with an all metal body, changing to plastic in 1937. My model (see Image 4), produced around 1938 has the geared, coupled 'viewing and taking' lens for focusing, and a unique side door to house a filter and extinction meter. The extinction meter was used on many early cameras and is a system of a graded neutral density filter. Numbers on the filter represented an exposure setting, based on the brightness of light passing through the meter.

The Wirgin camera company started producing cameras in the 1930's and is best known for the 35mm single lens reflex EDIXA. My Wirgin twin lens reflex (see Image 5) has a unique double exposure prevention system built into the film winding mechanism. There is an extinction meter placed above the top viewing lens. This model has a Rodenstock lens in a Compur shutter.

My last TLR is a RICOHFLEX, see picture 6. The RICOH name has been used since 1963. Before that, it was RIKEN which started in Japan in 1917 as an institute to promote Japanese industry. The RIKEN company started as a camera company in 1936, using the name RIKEN Optical Co. until 1963. I have had this simple TLR for years; the picture of my daughter was taken with the RICOH when she was five; she is in her forties today (Image 7).

Opportunities From Karen Dillon

Until March 10th at UMBC, For All the World to See: Visual culture and the struggle for civil rights.: Already displayed at the Smithsonian National Museum of African American History and Culture, this exhibition explores the impact of visual media, from photography and film to soup cans and souvenirs, on conceptions of African Americans in 20th century American life. Not to be missed but if you cannot make the trip to Catonsville by March 10 be sure to peruse the online exhibition. Exhibit details and link here: www.umbc.edu/cadv/foralltheworld/index.php

Also currently at UMBC, Persian Visions: Contemporary Photography from Iran; This challenging exhibit has been touring the U.S. for eight years and will be displayed in the library gallery until March 24th. More here: <http://aok.lib.umbc.edu/gallery/current.php>

Coming in April at UMBC, A New Context: Photographs from the Baltimore Sun Revisited. Look for an announcement of the opening reception to be held on a Monday or Tuesday in April. Jed Kirschbaum, former Baltimore Sun photographer, and Tom Beck, Chief Curator of the Albin O. Kuhn library at UMBC, and others will speak about the exhibit, photojournalism and the UMBC photographic archives. Gallery receptions are always free with light refreshments--a great chance for an outing with camera club buddies! <http://artscalendar.umbc.edu/2012/04/14/a-new-context-photographs-from-the-baltimore-sun-revisited/>
